The best-remembered and most interesting points referred to in this review were the dramatic capture of lou l'erdicarus by the Moroccan tribal leader. Raisuli, in 1904, and the "Agadir incident" of 1911, which almost precipitated war between Ger-many and France in the summer of that year. Miss Richards reminded her audience that she was in Ger-many when the crisis growing out of the clash of authority between the French and Germans in Morocco, known as the "Agadir incident," was at its height, and she gave a graphic account of the excitement in the Fatherland—also in France and Belgium-following the general orders to the colors of both regulars and reservists, "at which time the dreaded var spirit ran high all over central Europe, a war spirit which mercifully failed to develop into the fever of actual war. And having tided over so sharp a crisis as that of 1911, after actually witnessing numerous stern preparations for real war, what wonder that the world was skeptical, in
